

Project summary

The festival linked the conversation on menstrual health and the current climate crisis realities that communities faced in the Pacific. It also brought communities and partner organisations together that FWRM has been working with to raise awareness on the significance of Menstrual Hygiene.

Key note speaker event and FWRM's Board Chair

"Women and girls still face social, political and cultural barriers to controlling their sexuality, sexual and reproductive health. Discrimination and the prevalence of gender-based violence is a threat to women's health and lives. FWRM continues to advocate for women's rights to health and safety across the intersectional issues that impact women's and girls lives. FWRM firmly believes that women's rights to sexual and reproductive health and wellbeing are human rights."

Achievements

Partners Preparatory Meeting where four partner organisations were present.

Let's Talk Period Festival on Saturday 27 July 2024 in Suva, the capital of Fiji. This was a one-day event to raise awareness on the significance of Menstrual Hygiene with fun filled information sessions, activities and games where a total of 167 individuals attended.

The festival included a powerful opening, an energizer, intergenerational panel discussion on the topic: "Menstrual Health in the era of the Climate Crisis", five information booths where each partner organisation was ready with interactive games and information resource materials to ignite an interactive learning experience.
