Empowering Change

Project summary

With this project, Journalists for Human Rights aims to advance gender equality in sustainable development, climate solutions, and toxic-free societies.

Slavjanka Radevska

Participant and co-organiser of the Policy Advocacy Workshop on Gender Equality in Sustainable Development

"Before this, it felt like our voices were invisible, especially when it came to decisions that affected our daily lives. Now, we're not just part of the conversation—we're leading it."

Achievements

JHR engaged with 10 civil society organisations (CSOs), 5 women's groups, and 15 individual stakeholders.

JHR established communication with UNEP representatives and began preparations for participation in UNEA6

JHR conducted an analysis of existing policies, focusing on the gender dimensions of sustainable development, climate solutions, and toxic-free societies. JHR then developed policy briefs and recommendations.

JHR organized policy dialogues, workshops, and awareness campaigns, engaging directly with policymakers and using social media for broader dissemination.

JHR strengthened coalitions with like-minded organizations and developed a detailed advocacy strategy, targeting both regional and global levels.
